

Dear addressee,

You might have wondered, why we have been addressing you with these unsigned letters and this writing. It may be the case that we didn't have the right to draw you into such questions without your permission. In our writing, we found ourselves engaged in the difficult endeavor of addressing those, who our friends and we remember.

We would like to reassert you that this correspondence is not meant to startle you, though it might touch you. There are three more letters to come. You can decide, if you would like to take them personal or whether you would prefer to read them as you would read a book of an unknown writer.

We had to realise that some letters have gone lost with the post. You can read them all in the order of sending until today at www.faculty.cc
